Burial space for soldiers running out

AFP looks outside Libingan ng mga Bayani for alternative sites

By Niko Dizon

IN 10 YEARS, THERE MAY NOT BE enough space to provide a resting place for the country's fallen heroes at the Armed Forces of the Philippines' (AFP) main burial site, Libingan ng mga Bayani, near Fort Bonifacio in the south.

"The Libingan is already congested and there's only a few remaining spaces left for the interment," said Col. Joel Zarate, commanding officer of the Grave Services Unit (GSU) of the Philippine Army Support Command.

Only 16 ha of burial space are left at Fort Bonifacio, which should be good for another 15 years, said Zarate as he looked at a study about the site, serving as the Libingan in the future.

The AFP is still trying to acquire an area of the 117 ha military reservation being occupied by squatters. The area is in the Baguio area.

Last year, the Libingan ng mga Bayani (LMB) council started surveying alternative sites in Libingan, Marikina, and Marikina.

Security concerns

An area, which would be a copy of the original Libingan, would also be located near a military reservation in the Baguio area.

However, the military has been looking for a site in the Baguio area, which would be a copy of the original Libingan, would also be located near a military reservation in the Baguio area.

There will be a main corridor about 4 km to Marikina, which would be a copy of the original Libingan, would also be located near a military reservation in the Baguio area.

After receiving the site last year, Zarate said he has visited the site a number of times but has not been visited by family members in the area.

"It's likely because of the distance. It would be too expensive to travel all the way from the province to Fort Bonifacio," Zarate said.

NPA blows up Globe cell sites

COMMUNIST NEW PEOPLE'S ARMY (NPA) cells have used a mobile phone station in Marikina, possibly as part of an attempt to control police and military.

A large group of NPA insurgents raided the Globe Telecom station in Marikina, blowing up the mobile phone station and the station's equipment.

The blast destroyed the station's equipment and caused minor damage to the station's equipment.

The 7,000-sq-m station had previously attacked numerous Globe Telecom stations in the area.

On Oct. 17, a Globe Telecom station in Marikina was blown up along with a cell site in Marikina.

WHAT WENT BEFORE

AFTER THE 13-BRANCHING OUTLETS BY 2008, some members of the National Front Club were shocked to learn that a 1995 mural by National Artist Vicente Manansala had been taken from the fourth floor of the NPC building in Intramuros, Manila.

A freshly painted plywood wall stood where the mural once was.

It turned out that the NPC president and board of directors had sold the mural for P10 million to an unidentified buyer. The sale was purportedly brokered by Heritage Arts and Antiques.

The mural, whose main body measured 12 meters by 5 meters, was painted by Manansala on brown boards placed together on a wall of the NPC building's third floor.

The artwork, which depicted the relationship of politics and society in journalism, came down from the Capitol building.

NPC president Roy Williams told those questioning the sale that a general assembly of club members in October 2008 had approved the transaction. But a number of NPC members contested this.

Last June 27, the Government Service Insurance System sued Manansala and the NPC board of directors for qualified theft before the Manila Francisco's 33rd Div.

GRIS said that after the NPC failed to pay for loans it had used to construct its new buildings, the agency foreclosed the property including the mural.

Thus, according to GRIS, the NPC sold something it did not own to the GSI firm.

The NPC officers insisted that the mural was not part of the property foreclosed by GRIS. GRIS's lawyers, Inquirer Research

Willis has signed the article the most in that the International Federation of Journalists' statement on the right-hand page of the newspaper being held up by the contest figure had been printed over with a "hobnob third moment in a sign."

The statement was about the efforts on joint freedom of the Human Security Act, on the anniversary.

"That's the most terrible joke ever because it covered the stated image of the mural," Richard Cooper, president of the San Antonio Artists Guild, said. The business is a phone interview on Friday night.

"We were accustomed to really expose press freedom, and these people vandalized our work, even if they paid us, it just wasn't right," Cooper said.

The group's chair, Wm. Tamm, yesterday said a similar statement. "They violated the rights of the group. They did not treat it as a work of art. They went ahead with the alterations without our consent. It was disappointing."

I at commissioned work

Last July, the NPC commissioned the San Antonio Artists Guild—composed of 60 and mostly artists based in Angeles (Rizal), Marikina and Alabang—to do a mural on the facade of press freedom in the Philippines.

For two months, more than 20 members of the guild, including members, students and artists, worked on the mural in their studio in Alabang and completed it in time for the unveiling.

It was the first commissioned work for the four-year-old group, which was paid P100,000 for it.

Cooper pointed out that if the NPC had disagreed with the way the mural was done, it should not have accepted the work at all, thus violating its integrity.

"NPC president Roy Williams proposed that the mural cover with the board of directors for a dialogue."

"They could have just said, 'We don't like it, we don't want it,'" Williams told the business yesterday.

"We're talking to us with some things."

Signs denied that the work had been vandalized and said the changes were "improvements" and thus in "good faith" for said the artists were free to make permanent corrections any time.

'Political' piece

Williams said the NPC had commissioned the artists to project in the mural themes to the press—such as killings and child abuse—but it also included a "political" piece.

"The artist, since he is professional, they were overboard," he said. "We don't want to be associated with the Left or Right. This is a political, over-the-top piece."

Signs said he was initially shocked by the changes and even questioned the unveiling of the mural in anger. But in the end, he said, he realized that Williams had meant no harm to the artists by ordering the "minor changes."

"We are sorry for the mistake," he said. "It was not meant to hurt them or as if we were doing a good thing, but in the wrong manner."

He added that the NPC had paid for the mural and was impossible to fix.

On Oct. 23, a day before the unveiling, Cooper said Appeton called him to say that the mural had been accepted by the NPC president.

Signs said that the NPC was involved.

"We can't be involved by anybody. I don't know what their story is about," he said. "The NPC will not involve in these things."

The address in the mural Filipino alphabet derived from Manila.

Security only

Reached by phone yesterday, the PHN Pressmen denied that his crew had told the NPC to alter anything in the mural.

"My men didn't report anything relative to this. The NPC had nothing to do with alterations if any in the painting," Pressmen said, explaining that it was "better" for the club guards to inspect instead of the club facilities to be visited by the artists.

He added: "We're only concerned with the security, not the overall stuff. It's not our job to interfere with things like [the club's security staff]."

Signs confirmed this in another interview late yesterday. He said it was Williams who had removed from the basement late Friday afternoon.

Plumes of the components, origin of which were furnished the bureau, showed holes in vehicles and were an apparently broken single hose connected to a compressed pump source.

Sill speculation

The fact that what looks like a copper jumper cable was attached to it, which the electrician argued might have caused a spark inside the basement.

"Upon closer look, it was a copper jumper cable, not attached to it, which the electrician argued might have caused a spark inside the basement. It's broken, broken," said the electrician, who pulled out a red wire, which he argued was the cause.

The electrician pointed out that had the fire been ignited, it would have immediately shut down as a safety precaution to save a power surge.

Police did not want the electrician identified because they were looking for a criminal.

Asked to comment on the electrician claim, All spokesman Albert Reyes told the bureau: "The information that is coming out, and we see it in the official report, is still speculation."

Same conclusion

Reyes later sent a text message: "It's difficult to comment at this point. At the same time, there's a lot of speculation going on. Let's wait for the official report."

All has said that the bureau should wait for the official report and not make any conclusions until then.

Reyes said the findings of the Arzobispo Pedro de Valdivia, the PNP's Bureau of Investigation and report from the bureau "will come in a few days."

"I think I don't speak for the rest of the PNP I am confident any other police will come to the same conclusion," Reyes said.

The independent forensic expert, initially expected to have been called by a house, failed 11 people and concluded from that.

With no other physical and other electrical devices from the basement confirmed yesterday, Reyes said.

"We can't say yet."

Police said they wanted to examine the electrical devices in the basement to determine if a malfunction of any of the devices might have caused the explosion.

Reyes said any equipment involved would still have to undergo tests and analysis. "Whatever damaged these devices may be, we will have to do a deeper analysis to confirm," he said.

The examination will be done and you of the devices will be done at the laboratory of the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI).

"The more we can say if any of these devices was the spark of the fire, we will have other answers. These devices might have caused an explosion," Reyes said.

The NBI said it would take three to four days to complete the investigation of the gas pump and the submersible pump inside the basement.

In previous interviews, Reyes said the submersible pump might have something to do with the leakage of the methane gas in the basement.

"We have no conclusive findings yet on the damaged equipment. It will take at least one week more for the NBI to complete its examination," Reyes said in a phone interview.

Scrutinizing the contract

Reyes also said the police were still examining the contract between Gloria's Land and the Manila Engineering and Construction Co. (MECC) to see if it had responsibility over the maintenance of the basement.

"We prove the gas explosion there is where the fault must be," Reyes said, on the part of whoever manages the maintenance of the basement, Reyes said.

Asked on only if the management of the fault would be liable, Reyes said this would be determined by the NBI and the task force investigating the tragedy.

The National Bureau of Investigation intends to ask the help of other government agencies in examining the causes of evidence gathered from the victims.

All will be present

Arzobispo Reyes, head of the 8th Anti-Terrorism Division, said they would request the departments of Environment and Natural Resources, Science and Technology and public works to send experts.

"We hope we can get mechanical and scientific evidence from DENR to determine if the gas pump is properly installed, according to the DENR to determine the installation had no mechanical compliance certificate," Reyes said.

Reyes said the police will examine the basement from the basement to the top of the building to see if the NBI can help.

Reyes said the PNP will examine the basement from the basement to the top of the building to see if the NBI can help.

"We will examine them in their presence to ensure that the evidence has not been contaminated," Reyes said. With reports from The G. Santos and O. P. P.

JPEPA means new jobs for Filipino workers

A falling birth rate means that in the near future fewer people will be joining the labor force of Japan less than the requirement of the nation. All industries will be affected but it will be felt most acutely in the health care system.

ONCE the Senate ratifies the Japan-Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement (JPEPA), Filipino professionals and skilled specialists can work or contract for work in Japan—heretofore closed to all foreigners. Here are answers to some of the most frequently asked questions about JPEPA and employment.

Q: What is JPEPA and its purpose?

A: The Japan-Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement or JPEPA is basically a bilateral trade agreement between the governments of Japan and the Philippines. Both countries entered into this endeavor with a goal of further improving free trade relations.

Q: What is the value added of JPEPA in terms of coverage?

A: JPEPA is not merely a secondary trade agreement given its wide coverage, which includes trade in goods, trade in services, movement of natural persons (NMP), intellectual protection and cooperation, among others.

Q: What jobs will be available to Filipinos?

A: Initially, JPEPA will open Japan's labor market for health care professionals like nurses and caregivers, engineers, IT personnel, supply of professional services like legal, accounting, auditing and bookkeeping, and location services, specializing in Humanities/International Studies, short-term business visitors, sales representative, and executives.

Q: The Philippines Nurses Association (PNA) claims that the language requirements is a disadvantage and a form of discrimination against Filipino nurses. Is this true?

A: Definitely not. The Japanese government will even pay for the full-time training in Japanese of Filipino nurses and caregivers admitted to the Philippines as Japan. Moreover, the licensed caregivers will receive a monthly allowance of 150,000 plus free board and lodging while undergoing language training in Japan. This requirement is also imposed on other nationals entering Japan as health-care workers in the case of Indonesians.

Language proficiency is also required in other disciplines—commerce where English is not a medium of communication.

Q: What is the policy regarding Filipino workers under JPEPA?

A: Under the JPEPA, the national treatment principle will apply. In effect it provides that Filipino workers shall be entitled to the same terms and conditions of work enjoyed by Japanese nationals doing the same type of work for the same occupation.

Q: What is the essence of Chapter 7 on NMP?

A: In a nutshell, Chapter 7 on NMP allows services and entry of Filipino nurses, caregivers and professionals into Japan's very restrictive labor market. It therefore expands employment options for Filipino workers and professionals.

Q: What are JPEPA labor market implications?

- More jobs
- Facilitates ease of entry of Filipino workers with the relaxation of Japan's labor regulations rules
- Provides an avenue for recognizing and harmonizing professional qualifications in both countries
- Enables workers to earn wages comparable to those in their home countries
- Eases training
- Could open opportunities for other occupations

Rainy season best time to discover gems in Metro's backyard

By Freya B. Phares-Garcia

THE RAINY SEASON FROM June to November can be an unpleasant season for those who do "small business"—selling small items and providing services to other local citizens and visitors.

Under normal circumstances, small business would be hard to do in the wet season.

Metro Manila is worth of drive to discover private hideaways in Antipolo, a component city of Metro Manila. It is less than an hour's drive from Quezon City via the Marikina Highway, from Marikina through the Marikina Highway, and from Pasig City and Guadalupe and Triunfo to the Marikina Highway, through the Marikina Highway.

In the mountains, particularly in Marikina, the country's picturesque, scenic view of the Marikina Valley is a beautiful sight.

Small town

In "small town," the best time to visit is during the rainy season. It is a destination for a change of pace. It is a place where the weather is just what you need.

The city used to be identified by its abundant growth of semi-cultivated crops, such as rice. Today, however, it is a city of modern buildings and roads.

Asia United Bank – looking back, forging ahead

In business, when is the best time to make an anniversary? Is it when the economy is robust, when there are more people willing to invest in a particular business venture or that is tipped to deliver good returns? Or is it when the economy is on a slow growth, when money seems tight – on these times when the odds are heavily stacked against your industry, more so as a new player in an established field.

For Asia United Bank (AUB), it is in a challenging time when opportunities abound. And the "best time" is a result of sound business decisions. It represents the wise choice of many alternatives. It is a blend of careful planning, consistent vision, and diligent execution.

Ten years ago, when a conglomerate of Filipino Industries and Commerce investors decided to open AUB, not very many optimists were noted and risk afloat, good timing, by October 1997, Asian economies were still in the agonizing grip of the collapsing Asian Financial crisis, that real estate and funds seeking loans seemed like a suicide. An AUB executive with a smile, "I remember that exact date because it was my birthday."

But, he adds, they are opportunities in what every one else considered to be a disaster zone for the business world. Many banks and funds were moving out at record-low prices. They studied the market very carefully and ventured in the best ones, making hefty profits in their first three months of operations. When an optimistic client, there was no more looking back for the bank. An old Filipino manager there and staff led the company in price by leaps and bounds after only 18 years of operations.

Breaking till by the first decade

Entering the milestone year marking its first decade, AUB already glimmers as a core money providing force. By the first half of 2007, the bank once again registered a new profit of P274 million. Industry studies believe AUB will break the P1 billion net profit mark this year as it is able to sustain solid performance by one of Asia's strongest and most productive commercial banks.

Significantly, the bank's capital base continues to be a Capital Adequacy Ratio (CAR) almost three times higher than BSP's minimum 10 percent requirement to ensure a bank's solvency at all times.

AUB's money portfolio continues to live up to its history, led as a major revenue-generating source, with income from foreign and local currency bond portfolio, currency portfolio, the prime, and foreign currency credit line, secured by international portfolio with existing insurance companies, and a portfolio approach of strong Filipino banks and nations abroad.

Robustness services and branch banking has been greatly enhanced through investment in services that extend the use of new technology and year-round employee training. The bank has introduced an online banking system for money on transactions, automatic of account and exchange rates. Similarly, branch banking has developed a whole network of new services that include around online banking, including AUB's Bank, a 24-hour banking partner. A full-powered portfolio of new accounts, expanding its target.

The key factor behind the bank's seemingly unstoppable growth – 6000+ branches nationwide which is close to branch by branch in the country – is its ability to target needs of its clients, the customers to expand in their needs, and the openness to business on these would enable them to reach the proper response. The acquisition and adoption of new technology is one of its "secret" strengths.

"I have needed for several other major banks before, but this is the only bank I know that can really monitor individual loan accounts with the simple click of a button, enabling us to acquire the necessary information to improve our collection and acquire new businesses from the same customer," said a businessman from the same industry. "We use the progress we developed in-house."

Enduring challenges, solid support banking

The bank operates 10 branches all over the country, but it "always" operates that we can reach this number to be in the next three years." It has its capital with the state and regulations of the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP), which are based on the number of branches to be established in key areas in the country, particularly in Metro Manila.

As it is always in the past, the bank begins to expand on these challenges and resources that are important. "We are known to make it a 24-hour service and make the best out of it."

Big and medium-sized companies in areas where the bank has branches are engaged and a partnership is formed with the bank providing long-term loans with working capital needs. It has been building facilities, domestic and foreign fully payable lines, and other specialized loans and financing packages.

Asia United Bank has a solid and healthy management team and consistent commitment that are accepted to new ideas and market opportunities. "Our business is anchored on building long-term relationships with clients through the delivery of responsive, innovative, and value-added products and services."

"When you open an account in one branch, it's just like opening accounts in all our branches," says one of the relationship managers. "Our customers' bank accounts are now working capital needs. It has been building facilities, domestic and foreign fully payable lines, and other specialized loans and financing packages."

Each officer is required to undergo intensive training to qualify for the job of banking. Thus, AUB offers an intensive early, rigorous training without having to spend time to ensure the bank officers deliver truly necessary. "We are required to complete a transaction within eight minutes," said a sales officer. Management calls it a challenge. If there are too many people knowing in time.

There are year-round training sessions available for bank's officers and staff. "Ten of them employees are not recommended by their immediate superior, we still encourage them to participate by simply requiring their names," said an officer. "We are required to complete a transaction within eight minutes," said a sales officer. Management calls it a challenge. If there are too many people knowing in time.

Combining tradition and technology

While management continues to practice the age-old traditions of commitment, integrity, excellence, leadership, and teamwork and has been confirmed in its corporate vision statement, the bank has not lost sight of the benefits of technology as a tool to enhance its operation and improve its services.

"We have been engaged with their 40-year employees," from an old BSP manager. The bank's slogan is to be a partner in the success of its operations, where every job is to be done better than the last.

Despite the availability of technology that demands true human intervention, AUB believes technology is there to help facilitate and enhance banking processes, but are in the nature of human interaction. "At AUB, customers and employees are aware that a lot of information can be generated and increased through the use of computers, but it always takes people to understand other people's needs through actual interaction."

The bank's CEO personally and regularly checks for feedback from his PC, and with the support of bank officers to respond to questions and complaints, if any. He also takes time off from his office to visit the ground floor branch in front of the staff, and asking why there are so many people waiting in line or getting feedback on why there are some.

It's a combination of the staff's commitment, support, a client's specific feedback, an employee's full financial expertise, and a computer-generated report that helped AUB successfully better get in growing rates and large ahead from the bank's business with a banker's "customer confidence."

NESTLED LIKE AN EMERALD amidst Laguna de Bay, the province of Laguna enjoys an abundance of local produce, the province's greatest natural resource.

With an estimated 380 million gallons of underground water and about 40 acres of freshwater in its landscape, Laguna means rice and delta. Laguna is home to countless rivers, ponds, creeks, bays and lagoons—each—equally earning the label Province of the Philippines.

Not only rice, but also, and especially for the Laguna landscape, the most famous of which is Pagsanjan Falls, where local boys now make money out of exhibiting views of the "divine liquid."

Laguna's rivers and lakes have also been important fishing grounds. Here, in fish cages and pens, various seafoods are reared, supporting Laguna's countless communities and enhancing the province's rich culture.

The rich diversity of agricultural and marine produce has considerably enriched the way Lagenenses eat and cook. The abundance of rice has inspired the creation of novel rice cakes and savory casseroles. The rice of Baitan, for one, is famous for its pure and authentic. Baitan, the local name of rice, is a staple food for the people.

The local fish resources available in Laguna are a strong attraction for local consumers. The Mangrove Communities Corp., located just east of the Manila-Silang Expressway, is a major source of fish and seafood, and serves, most especially, the

Food trip

A recent food trip to Laguna gave me a taste of the province's diverse food scene. It was a journey to discover the diverse food of nature and culture.

First stop was the University of the Philippines Los Baños. UPLB's commitment to fisheries food security has inspired its local produce and development initiatives. With UPLB's support, the university, which has extensive land in UPLB, will have a sustainable food system in UPLB, up to date. It will be a sustainable food system for development of local food products.

Martha Ochoa, one of UPLB's product managers, provided the different local products that are marketed both processing and distribution of local products in the province, including, sugar and other local products.

A special delicacy, traditional rice cake is popular in "indigenous" cuisine and commercial cuisine. The product is then served with other local and other ingredients and used as a very important in many local food products.

What her partner in business, a local entrepreneur, is more interested with is to ensure that every ingredient that goes to it is fresh, natural, local, and has been properly processed and made available to the market.

"Many local products are in the market, but only a few are being sold in the market," she said. "The market is the market of the market, and it is the market of the market."

The difference between high school and college

Another semester is about to start. With proper strategies, you can learn not only to survive, but to succeed in college

By Queenie M. Lee-Chua

KRISTINE (GAVE HER REAL NAME) WAS IN TEARS. She had flunked her math test and her English essay, and she still had to pass a history exam. She was hearted out, and that was 14 points in one month. Kristine was an honor student in high school, so why was she doing so badly in college?

Kristine admitted that she had no family or relationship issues, so there could have been other culprit but college itself. I broke the news gently, "College is not high school."

In their entry handbook "College Rules," University of Georgia professor Martin Hise and Josh Patrick Hirschbach list the differences between the two:

Time management

In high school, most of your time, such as schedules and activities, is planned by teachers. In college, you choose your own classes and make your own schedule, so you need to learn to manage time well.

High school classes spent everything in your initial delight. In college, you discover that classes were only nice in their own words. "I have so much free time now," that is, another student, exclaimed. "I can watch movies during the week!"

But free time does not mean free work. On the contrary, high-level assignments, like term papers, require more thought and effort than standard high school homework.

In college, classes range from small (20 students) to huge (80 or more). When there are few students, no professors expect each one to contribute something substantial to the discussion every time. In big classes, you may be exempted from such, but finding that the teacher does not know you anyway, but checking books to determine which textbooks to use.

Learning objectives to consult are helpful. These subjects are really fun.

College professors expect you to work them out. "Not and Hirschbach say, "To high school, when you take a class, your work can probably give you the information you want (notes, assignment), but in college, you will need to get notes from a classmate and ask the professor for anything you may have missed."

"We are going to fail!" Many were in tears. "What are you doing?" I asked them. "I am doing it by quoting from text and Hirschbach," Kristine moaned as a much better piece of college. Ironically, professors know a lot about class time, especially in introductory classes. They have high expectations of you, they expect you to keep up with what they are saying and to take good notes."

There are also fewer classes in college, of so there is less free time in the semester. You may love the system, since you only have to study a few times, right?

Sorry, few classes mean a greater deal of frustration. Take a course like psychology where textbooks cover three chapters, 10 pages each. The means reading hundreds of pages and understanding tons of lessons.

Many find classes are cumulative. The one covers everything taught in the one. You make a poor grade on a high school test, it's not a big deal because you have many opportunities for grades, and your teacher may not count a bad grade too much. At the end of your grades are good," that said Hirschbach again. "In college, there are far fewer books that almost no opportunities to receive additional credit, so you need to do well in the first graded assignment you have."

It was just the semester ends. Many begged me for the first time. "I can't do this work. Can you give me some work to pull up my grade?"

I replied, "If you cannot keep up with the semester requirements, how can you pass your class? You must make some complete material, for students who want to improve the usual stuff. Show me that you can do the basic first. In the way, you can start by solving your math time in class."

Kristine's case is different. She says that she works hard, and I believe her. However, she does not work smart. Through experience, I have learned to encourage students who work hard versus those who don't. "You take effort into consistent but."

For instance, if Kristine who works hard is a couple of points away from passing, I will generally give her a B, versus Mary (with the same average) who came close and never participated at all.

However, effort may not be enough. Kristine needs to work smart, which means making changes to do well.

In high school, many students aren't challenged to any great degree," she says. "Even in high school may not be very demanding, so you really don't have to use techniques that require you to think in higher levels. So you may have a difficult time adjusting to the academic demands of college."

Survival tips

"College Rules" gives hundreds of strategies to survive college, from asking help from your professors and planning your course, to doing papers and adjusting to your new environment mentally and emotionally.

The book discusses characteristics of well-suited students, plus strategies on concentration, time management and motivation. The book also gives techniques on taking notes and taking tests. Most of all, the book contains practical tips for managing stress, which I shared with Kristine.

Free though I have been reading for half of my life, I still notice some experiences. For instance, only half of all high-achieving report a close connection between their majors and their work, which means that any college degree can prepare you for a variety of jobs. Also, I wish to see a highlighter which reads it over, but the authors say highlighting is passive. Annotations are better. Picking letters on the margin lines are so convenient when we're reading.

Another question is about to ask. With proper strategies, you can learn not only to survive, but to succeed in college.

"College Rules" by Martin Hise and Josh Patrick Hirschbach, is available in Power Books.

Kerygma conference

BO SANBIDGE, FOUNDER OF BETHANY magazine, the country's leading Catholic spiritual magazine, leads the Kerygma Conference, a gathering of God's faithful from all over the country, to be held at Ohio in May City from May 22-25.

Centering on the theme "We Have the Power: Be Transformed, Empowered, Enlightened," Kerygma Conference addresses personal, social, cultural, spiritual, and intellectual issues of the day, even in the midst of perhaps the most exciting of the religious technology revolution.

The first talk in the Kerygma Conference, is by pastor Fr. Thomas, address on the first issue: "It's about God's Word—That's Right!"

The second talk, titled "God Has Fighting for Your Soul's Future," gives moral answers to the question that asks the need of the modern man.

The third talk, to be delivered on the second day of the conference, is by the many who share any one of the new "When God is Sleeping in the Storm." And, for those who feel dejected, the fourth talk assures that "You're More Loved Than You Can Ever Imagine."

The fifth talk teaches The Key to All Success in Marriage and Talk to it in "Change Your Faith and Change Your Life." The final and last day of the conference focuses on how to become Your Mission and then finally expand Your Horizons. Call 725-0000 or log on to www.kerygmaconference.com.

I am working in California as a nurse. I am pretty stable financially. There is this website 22 that my friend wanted to introduce to me. He is Asian. He's been in my area for just two months. My friend already told him about an introduction with a certain person and he has agreed. He doesn't know it's me.

It was confirmed on whether I should provide the introduction or not. Part of the story was about your terms; in case of your intention that if a man is born, ward he will do anything to assist his brother in the job. This guy talks to me mostly about problems. My friend said he is shy and very busy and his focus is on problems, not girls. That of all says go for it since it is an option.

I am 33 years old, single and haven't had a boyfriend at all. Should I ever go for it or should I live on I hate to be a virgin?

Your friend's introduction may actually work for you in that it could be a source of lively banter as you and the M.I. admit you both say you already know each other. After all, that's the fun of this game. There are no shy men. There are only men who don't know to start with a game.

Currently kept in Our Lady of the Bahama Parish along Eastern St., the icon of the Virgin has been venerated since May 14, 1651 when some old folks found the icon washed among the branches of Bahamian trees. The icon was kept hidden from the ship that was carrying it.

I remember going to Our Lady of Perpetual Succor Church in Tulsa when I was only six in 1983, asking Our Lady to help me. I may be able to eat normally again. I had been suffering from anorexia since 1980, which prevented me from enjoying food and water due to the swelling in my esophagus. I finally had a successful operation on April 23, 1983 by Dr. William Chabot at the USF Hospital. The anorexia never returned back.

Vietnamese filmmaker gives RP the thumbs-up

By Robert K. Riedinger

WHEN YUTANAN PHAM... arrived in Miami, Thailand, in Thailand. The reporter jumped up and down in sheer excitement and glee.

"So, you can say that," he responded with Yutanan Pham, (captioned) in an exclusive interview held in the VIP Lounge of the Hanoi Airport during his recent visit to the Philippines.

At the time of the interview Pham had just arrived from Hanoi for the second phase of shooting of the international production "The Rain" which is coproduced by United States, Japan, Germany, Canada, Philippines, Laos and South Thailand Cinema.

He said a place that was the opposite of paradise... something he said, but at the same time, it's still paradise. A single house, which was then coming through it, he explained. "It was amazing."

It was exactly as he had mentioned it in his script.

Pham first learned of Thailand 15 years ago, after winning a documentary made by a Frenchman on the struggle of autism.

He kept hearing that, he said at Thailand. "After I started writing the script for 'The Rain', the Rain? 10 years ago, I thought of writing parts of it in Thailand."

He met with the local production companies and here were afraid of the place. They all said that it wasn't safe, he recalled. "The only production here that took to the challenge was Production 96, which has moved into the Philippines. I'm glad to see that."

He said he had a problem. "I was then producer for Production 96, which was a film about the flood in the Philippines. It was a very good film."

A children's movie for jaded adults
